Illegal Immigration on Decline

Study shows significant drop following last year's crackdown

The number of illegal immigrants in the country appears to have significantly declined over the last year, at least partly due to the chilling effect of stepped-up enforcement, according to a report released Wednesday by a Washington think tank that advocates stricter limits on immigration.

The study by the Center for Immigration Studies based its findings on Census data indicating that the number of less-educated, working-age Hispanic immigrants — 18- to 40-year-olds with a high school diploma or less — has dropped by more than 10 percent, or about 830,000 people, since last August.

Previous research suggests a large share of less-educated foreigners are in the country illegally, and that they make up the bulk of the illegal immigrant population. And while earlier declines in the number of these Hispanic immigrants have been linked to a rise in their unemployment rate, the current drop-off began last year almost immediately after Congress abandoned legislation to legalize undocumented immigrants and six months before there was any significant rise in their unemployment rate.

"The evidence is consistent with the idea that, at least, initially more robust enforcement caused the number of illegal immigrants to decline significantly," said Steven A. Camarota, one of the study's authors.

HISTORY

'Did You See That Gnarly Typo, Ruth?'

A letter detailing the mood after Truman defeated Dewey that was lost in the postal system for nearly 60 years recently turned up in the mailbox of a Kansas woman. Xan Wedel found the letter, postmarked Nov. 11, 1948, in her mailbox Friday. The letter was addressed to a Ruth Willisten in Rockfall, Conn., but it never reached its destination. It was sent by Gertrude Gilmore, who lived at Wedel's house in 1948. The letter states, "All Lawrence is in mourning since the election." Gilmore also talks about her new Westinghouse refrigerator and the new pastor at her church. (AP)

Cannibal Kebab Hypothesis False

Nearly two weeks after police began investigating spikes planted in the shallows of an urban Seattle lake, the mystery has been solved. The culprit? The Parks Department. The Parks Department says the spikes were placed in the lake more than 20 years ago to hold down plastic sheeting in an attempt to control water plants. Some park users feared sabotage after dozens of spikes were found in the swimming spot. At the time, Parks spokeswoman Dewey Potter said she suspected someone was trying to hurt people. Potter on Monday said, "I'm sorry it was us." (AP)

A 44-pound feline was found waddling around Saturday without a collar in Voorhees, N.J., and officials at the Camden County Animal Shelter hope she gets a nice — hopefully, diet-friendly — home. "She's built like a quarterback," said Deborah Wright, a shelter volunteer and current foster owner of the kitty. "I mean, how do you lose a 44-pound cat?" Shelter officials are calling the animal "Princess Chunk." The largest tabby on record weighed 46 pounds, 15 ounces. (AP)

Bush Signs Mortgage Rescue Bill

Legislation will help troubled homeowners secure cheaper loans

WASHINGTON | President Bush signed a housing bill Wednesday intended to rescue about 15 percent of the cash-strapped homeowners in fear of foreclosure in the next year or so.

Early in the morning and out of public view, the president signed it without fanfare in the Oval Office, adding his signature to a measure he once threatened to veto.

Bush

The legislation is regarded as the most significant housing bill in decades. It won approval from lawmakers eager, in an election year, to come up with an answer to the housing crisis.

The measure includes $300 billion in new loan authority for the government to back cheaper mortgages for troubled homeowners; $3.9 billion for communities to fix up foreclosed properties causing blight in neighborhoods; and $15 billion in tax cuts, including an expanded low-income housing tax credit and a credit of up to $7,500, to be repaid, for some first-time home buyers. FRESH REMINDER: Construction continues on the new Interstate 35W bridge, which will replace the old bridge that collapsed into the Mississippi River last year, killing 13.

One Year Later, Bridge Repairs Lag

Collapse in Minn. has not spurred needed repairs to structures

MINNEAPOLIS | A year after the worst U.S. bridge collapse in a generation brought calls for immediate repairs to other spans, two of every three of the busiest problem bridges in each state — carrying nearly 40 million vehicles a day — have had no work done on them beyond regular maintenance.

An Associated Press review of repairs of each state's 20 most-traveled bridges with structural deficiencies found just 12 percent have been fixed. In most states, the most common approach was to plan for repairs later rather than to fix problems now.

The bridges the AP reviewed — 1,020 in all — are not in imminent danger of collapse, state engineers and highway officials say. But the officials acknowledge the structures need improvement, many sooner rather than later.

The collapse of the eight-lane Interstate 35W bridge into the Mississippi River on Aug. 1, 2007, killed 13 people and brought calls for repairs to bridges across the United States.

The failure to follow through was not because of lack of effort, officials said. Soaring construction costs, budget shortages, election-year politics, a backlog of bridge projects, competing highway repairs and bureaucracy often held bridge work to only incremental progress.

The AP gathered information on repair status from 48 states and Washington, D.C. In six states, data could not be obtained for some locally owned bridges. Louisiana and Nevada failed to respond.

The AP investigation of repair records found the following:

→ Sixty-four percent of the bridges received no work beyond regular maintenance, though most were targeted for some kind of future work.

→ Structural defects were fixed on 12 percent — usually through a major rehabilitation or outright replacement.

→ An additional 24 percent have seen a partial improvement, either through a short-term repair to temporarily address the defect or an ongoing project that is not yet complete. (AP)

L.A.'s Paparazzi Problem

City leaders consider crackdown on horde of celebrity chasers

LOS ANGELES | The paparazzi keep taking their shots, but not always the kind they're after. Lately, it's a jab from a star's bodyguard — or his surfer pals — or the metallic pinch of handcuffs slapped on for lingering too long.

And more push-back may be coming.

Weary of the scrums of photographers chasing celebrities at the airport, on the beach and through the streets, some Los Angeles-area leaders are contemplating tougher regulations against the people who make their living by catching celebrities off-guard.

Officials from celebrity enclaves in and around Los Angeles such as Beverly Hills, West Hollywood, Malibu and Calabasas are convening Thursday for the first time to discuss ways to combat shutterbugs, whose tactics have grown more aggressive and confrontational.

Their goal is for each city to adopt its own ordinances to punish aggressive paparazzi, while keeping the rules uniform in the places where celebrities live and play.

"This is a response to their lack of responsible behavior," said Los Angeles City Councilman Dennis Zine, an outspoken paparazzi critic and organizer of the task force.

Zine and other civic leaders say they're concerned that, left unchecked, the aggressive photographers will either drive away entertainers, or worse — harm them or a bystander. ANTHONY MCCARTNEY (AP)

Doctors: Texters, Look Out

Oblivious cell phone users at risk for fatal accidents, group says

CHICAGO | The warning came too late for Barack Obama's adviser: Don't walk and text at the same time.

Obama aide Valerie Jarrett fell off a Chicago curb several weeks ago while her thumbs were flying on her BlackBerry.

"I didn't see the sidewalk, and I twisted my ankle," Jarrett said. "It was a nice wake-up call for me to be a lot more careful in the future, because I clearly wasn't paying attention, and I should have."

Jarrett got off easy and didn't need medical attention.

But in an alert issued this week, the American College of Emergency Physicians warns of the danger of more serious accidents involving oblivious texters. The ER doctors cite rising reports from doctors across the country of injuries involving text-messaging pedestrians, bicyclists, rollerbladers and even motorists.

Most involve scrapes, cuts and sprains from texters who walked into lampposts or walls or tripped over curbs.

Still, ER doctors who responded to a recent informal query from the organization reported two deaths in California. A San Francisco woman was killed by a pickup truck earlier this year when she stepped off a curb while texting, and a Bakersfield man was killed last year by a car while crossing the street and texting.

The U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission has no national estimate on how common texting-related injuries are.

European scientists unveiled a new method for extracting images hidden under old masters' paintings Wednesday, re-creating a portrait of a woman's face unseen since Vincent van Gogh painted over it in 1887. Iraqi lawmakers on Wednesday scheduled an emergency weekend meeting during summer recess to resolve disagreements that have blocked a provincial elections law and threaten a new wave of bloodshed in the disputed city of Kirkuk. Israeli PM Announces Resignation

Embattled Olmert plans to step down after September vote

JERUSALEM | Israeli Prime Minister Ehud Olmert, facing corruption allegations and plummeting approval ratings, announced Wednesday he will resign in September. The move threw his country into political turmoil and raised doubts about progress for U.S.-backed Mideast peace efforts.

Appearing angry and reading from a prepared text, Olmert made the brief statement at his official

"I was forced to defend myself against relentless attacks from self-appointed 'fighters for justice' who sought to depose me from my position, when the ends sanctified all the means," he said.

Olmert, 62, has consistently denied wrongdoing but pledged to resign if charged with corruption.

Olmert's term was to end in 2010, but he said he would not run in his party's primary election, set for Sept. 17, and would step down afterward "in order to allow the chairman to be elected and form a different government quickly and efficiently."

Olmert's popularity dropped below 20 percent at one point after his bloody but inconclusive 2006 war in Lebanon, and corruption allegations and police interrogations have battered him in recent months. Political analysts here have predicted his resignation for weeks.

Turkey's Ruling Party Avoids Ban

ISTANBUL, TURKEY | Turkey's top court narrowly voted against disbanding the ruling party Wednesday over accusations it is plotting to impose Islamic rule, but the judges cut off millions of dollars in state aid to a party locked in a power struggle with the secular elite.

The decision averted political chaos, at least in the short term, for a country seeking to join the European Union. But the case exposed the vulnerabilities of Western-style democracy in Turkey, where the fate of an Islamic-oriented governing party with strong electoral backing lay in the hands of a panel of 11 judges. Air Pollution Levels Drop in Beijing

Chinese officials say pre-Olympic measures helped clear the skies

BEIJING | Beijing's pollution levels dropped Wednesday to less than half of the previous day's, the lowest reading since authorities began pulling cars off the roads and shutting down factories to address athletes' concerns about air quality ahead of the Olympic Games.

A cooling wind and some rain helped sweep away pollutants and gave Beijing residents a respite from the sultry heat and humidity that had cloaked the city for days.

The polluted skies over the Olympic host city have been one of the biggest worries for the games' organizers. The concerns prompted Beijing officials to institute drastic measures earlier this month, including pulling half the city's 3.3 million vehicles off the roads, halting most construction and closing some factories in the capital and surrounding provinces.

The measures are having the

"The daily data since July 20 shows an improvement in air quality. It reflects the results since we restricted traffic and stopped heavy-polluting factories and construction," he said.

Athletes participating in the Aug. 8-24 games have raised concerns about the impact of the city's pollution on their health and their performance from the start. Some of the 10,500 Olympic athletes began arriving in large numbers this week. TINI TRAN (AP)

Karadzic Awaits U.N. Trial

Former Bosnian Serb leader transported to Hague detention unit

THE HAGUE, NETHERLANDS | The Yugoslav war crimes tribunal has Radovan Karadzic in custody at a detention center in The Hague, 13 years after indicting the Bosnian Serb leader on genocide charges.

From video of summary executions to photos of skeletal prisoners, prosecutors have plenty of evidence of atrocities.

But Slobodan Milosevic's tortuous trial demonstrated how tricky it is to prove a political leader masterminded the crimes as part of a genocidal plot to carve out an ethnically pure Serb minstate in Bosnia.

The late Serb despot, however, may have helped prosecutors by blaming Karadzic for Bosnian atrocities. Milosevic had argued that as leader of Serbia, he was not in control of Karadzic and his Bosnian Serb forces who killed tens of thousands of Bosnian Muslims and Croats in the 1992-95 Bosnian war.

"During the Milosevic trial, it became really clear that Karadzic was the real architect of genocide," said professor Michael Scharf, the director of the Frederick K. Cox International Law Center at Case Western Reserve University. "The defense made a convincing case that Milosevic was much less culpable than Karadzic."

Milosevic, a one-time mentor to Karadzic, died in his cell in March 2006, bringing his four-year trial to an inconclusive end.

Ten suspects have been charged with mankind's "crime of crimes" since the U.N. court opened in 1993. Only one, Gen. Radislav Krstic, who commanded Serb forces involved in a 1995 massacre in Srebrenica, has been found guilty. MIKE CORDER (AP)

Zimbabwe's decision to drop 10 zeros from its currency comes only a week after the issue of a $100 billion note, which is not even enough to buy bread.

Zimbabwe Drops Zeros in Currency

Effort to fix country's soaring inflation turns
$10 billion into just $1

HARARE, ZIMBABWE | Zimbabwe announced Wednesday that it is knocking 10 zeros off its hyper-inflated currency — a move that turns $10 billion into $1.

President Robert Mugabe threatened a state of emergency if businesses profiteer from the country's economic crisis, a move that could give him even more sweeping powers to punish opponents in the event that political power-sharing talks fail.

"Entrepreneurs across the board, don't drive us further," Mugabe warned in a televised address after the announcement.

Central Bank Gov. Gideon Gono

said he would drop the zeros from Zimbabwe's currency on Friday. The move comes a week after the issue of a $100 billion note — still not enough to buy a loaf of bread.

Gono said the new money would be launched with $500 bills. He also said he was reintroducing coins, which were obsolete for years.

Gono made the move because the high rate of inflation was hampering the country's computer systems. Electronic calculators and teller machines at Zimbabwe's banks cannot handle transactions in billions and trillions of dollars.

Economist John Robertson said the new bills would soon be worthless since the rate of inflation continues to skyrocket. What costs $1 at the beginning of the month can cost $20 by month's end, he said.

At the root of the problem, he said, was damage to the farming sector, along with government raids on the state pension fund and foreign currency bank accounts of businesses. ANGUS SHAW (AP)

Clashes Escalate in Pakistan Valley

PESHAWAR, PAKISTAN | Pakistani troops battled Islamic militants in a valley near the Afghan border Wednesday, killing 25 insurgents and losing five soldiers as escalating combat threatened the new government's policy of offering peace to pro-Taliban groups.

Authorities said security forces also chased off another band of extremists from a town elsewhere in the Swat Valley, a day after militants captured at least 25 police and paramilitary troops and clashes killed two soldiers and two militants.

The military, meanwhile, rejected new claims that Pakistan's main intelligence service has ties with Islamic hard-liners allied with the Taliban and al-Qaeda. (AP)

Teen Found With Guns, Teacher List

Police do not say why recent St. John's grad had weapons in home

The Bethesda teenager in whose home investigators found a cache of guns and potential bomb-making materials Tuesday was compiling a list of the addresses of teachers at his former high school, police said Wednesday.

Police officials said it was unclear why Colin McKenzie-Gude, 18, was making the list of teachers from St.

John's College High School, a private school in Northwest Washington from which he graduated this year. They have not said what, if anything, McKenzie-Gude planned to do with the weapons.

McKenzie-Gude turned himself in to police Wednesday at a Montgomery County police district station in Rockville, a day after the police search of his home in the 6300 block of Rockhurst Road in Bethesda.

Detectives and fire marshals found four illegally possessed assault rifles, two shotguns, one handgun and ammunition, police said. They said they also found more than 50 pounds of chemicals and several gallons of liquids inside the Bethesda home where McKenzie-Gude lives, though they did not specify what these materials were. Police got a tip from a citizen that prompted them to search the house.

The home also contained components commonly used to manufacture homemade explosives and other "destructive devices," fire officials said.

Museum Set to Reopen in November

National Museum of American History has been closed since 2006

WASHINGTON | A special new gallery for the flag that inspired the national anthem will debut in November when the Smithsonian's National Museum of American History reopens after a longer-than-expected renovation, the museum announced Wednesday.

The Nov. 21 reopening of the home of Kermit the Frog and Dorothy's ruby slippers coincides with the 145th anniversary of Abraham Lincoln's Gettysburg Address, the famous Civil War speech delivered on Nov. 19, 1863. The museum will give visitors a rare chance to see the White House copy of Lincoln's handwritten speech for several months. The document is usually kept in the Lincoln bedroom and must be back before the next president moves in.

"We want visitors to come away with a deeper understanding and appreciation of the American dream and what it has meant to be an American," said museum director

Brent Glass. A visit to the flag gallery, he said, "will be memorable and inspiring. It will be one of the must-see destinations in Washington, D.C."

The museum had been slated to reopen this summer, but officials said unexpected asbestos and lead paint discovered during construction caused some delays in the $85 million project. The building, which usually draws millions of visitors each year, has been closed since September 2006. The asbestos cleanup cost an additional $2 million, Glass said. BRETT ZONGKER (AP)

Md. Police Chief to Step Down

Pr. George's Melvin High resigns from his post effective Aug. 31

Prince George's County Police Chief Melvin C. High, who has been at the helm of his department for more than five years, will resign his post next month.

Sources said High, who came to the county from Norfolk and was a former assistant police chief in the D.C. police department, has scheduled a news conference for Thursday morning to announce his resignation effective Aug. 31. The chief's post will be filled by Assistant Chief Roberto Hylton, a career county officer, until a new chief is appointed by County Executive Jack B. Johnson, a Democrat.

In a letter addressed to Johnson and obtained by The Washington Post, High praised his department and the residents of the county. "I have come to a point in my life where it is time to make an adjustment in my work life," High said in the letter dated June 1. "Yet it is with both joy and sadness that I inform you of my intent to retire ... a department that I have come to truly and deeply love."

Salmonella 'Smoking Gun' Is Found

FDA traces outbreak to a tainted irrigation system at Mexico farm

WASHINGTON | The salmonella strain linked to a nationwide outbreak has been found in irrigation water and a serrano pepper at a Mexican farm, federal health officials said Wednesday.

Dr. David Acheson, the Food and Drug Administration's food safety chief, called the finding a key breakthrough in the case, as did another health official.

"We have a smoking gun, it appears," said Dr. Lonnie King, who directs the center for food-borne illnesses at the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

Acheson said the farm is in Nuevo Leon, Mexico. Previously, the FDA had traced a contaminated jalapeno pepper to a farm in another part of Mexico.

Acheson and other officials were grilled at a congressional hearing about why the investigation originally focused on tomatoes.

The officials insisted that tomaatoes still cannot be ruled out and that it is quite possible the outbreak was caused by several kinds of contaminated produce.

The outbreak has sickened more than 1,300 people since April.

Officials insist the outbreak may have been caused by several types of produce.

Tomatoes had been the prime suspect in the nationwide outbreak. But last week, the FDA said only jalapeno peppers grown in Mexico were the culprit. The FDA said then it had found the same strain of salmonella on a single Mexican-grown jalapeno in a Texas warehouse.

If it turns out the tainted irrigation water was also used on tomatoes, it could provide some of the evidence federal authorities are looking for to back their original focus on the fruit. RICARDO ALONSO-ZALDIVAR (AP)

DETROIT | General Motors Corp. plans to cut 15 percent of its U.S. and Canadian salaried work force — or about 5,100 jobs — by Nov. 1 as part of a plan to slash billions of dollars and help the automaker ride out a slump in sales.

A GM official declined to confirm the specific numbers but indicated they were generally accurate. The official asked not to be

Oil Unexpectedly Makes $4 Jump

NEW YORK | Oil prices soared over $4 a barrel Wednesday, halting a dramatic two-week slide after a surprise drop in U.S. gasoline supplies fed speculation that record fuel prices aren't keeping Americans off the roads.

But energy market analysts offered mixed views on whether prices would swing back toward record levels or whether Wednesday's big rally was just a temporary bump. Light, sweet crude for September delivery jumped $4.58 to settle at $126.77 a barrel on the New York Mercantile Exchange. (AP)

Little Receiver Is Still a Big Target

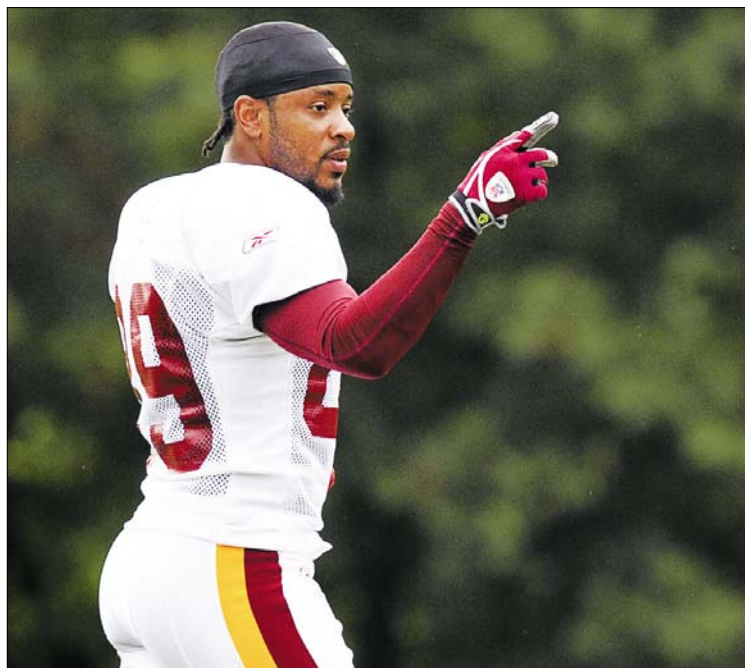

Moss has no problem adjusting to Zorn's new offensive scheme

REDSKINS | It's still pretty easy to find Santana Moss.

The short, speedy wideout somehow ends up open over the middle while running Jim Zorn's new offense in practice, which is predicated on shorter, more precise routes than he's been asked to run before in Washington.

Lost in the trees around the line of scrimmage? Not when Jason Campbell is used to looking for you.

"I just go out there and say, 'Do what's asked of me,'" Moss said while discussing his role in the new offense. "Numbers — we all want them. But just because one guy has more yards than the other doesn't Santana Moss says he realizes his numbers may go down this season with a lot more targets on offense, but his goal is just to do what is asked of him every day.

STILL THRASHING

The Redskins' first depth chart, released this week, had James Thrash as the backup to Moss:

→ That puts him ahead of Kelly in what seems to be a positive sign he'll make the Redskins squad for the ninth time in his 13-year career. Thrash — a receiver who makes more of an impact on special teams than offense — faces more competition to make the roster with the additions of Kelly and Thomas. "I expect he's going to catch some footballs this year," Zorn said.

mean he's a better receiver."

Moss has an interesting challenge this season in that there should be plenty more passes to be had, but they won't necessarily be directed at him. The eighth-year receiver has led Washington in receiving yards each of the last three years, including an 84-catch, 1,483-yard season in 2005 when he made the Pro Bowl. He's failed to equal those numbers in either of the last two seasons, in part because of the conservative and often disjointed approach taken by the Redskins' offense.

With the West Coast offense favoring large receivers, the Redskins drafted Devin Thomas (6-foot-1) and Malcolm Kelly (6-foot-3) in the second round, instantly increasing their size on the flanks.

Moss is well aware that the new personnel situation could complicate his hopes of getting back to the 1,000-yard mark. But when the clock is winding down in the fourth quarter this season, it's hard to imagine the Redskins won't be looking for No. 89 again.

"We've got some tall receivers out here. Some of these guys are like towers," Moss said. "They look like real good talents." ERIC BRANDNER

James Ready to Take Over as King

LeBron wants to be one of the leaders on Team USA this year

OLYMPICS | LeBron James was already one of the NBA's best players by the time he slipped on USA jerseys in 2004 and '06.

The problem was, the United States had enough good players. What the Americans really needed was someone to be a strong leader, but King James wasn't quite ready yet.

Now, one of the biggest reasons the United States is the favorite for the gold medal is because James has realized that this team doesn't just need him to be the player he is for the Cleveland Cavaliers.

It needs him to be comfortable with taking over a game or taking control of a timeout.

"I feel like I have to raise my leadership level to a new height when I get with these guys. It's just how I am as a person and as a player," James said.

"I'm a born leader, so I do whatever it takes for our team to understand what it means to win."

LeBron James never led the Americans in scoring in any of their nine games in 2006.

It wasn't always that way, though. The player who once would have allowed veterans such as Jason Kidd and Kobe Bryant to be the team leaders now shares that role with them.

"There's a lot of respect for LeBron," coach Mike Krzyzewski said. "I think LeBron these last two years, as good as he was, he's really grown to be a very complete basketball player."

After the disappointment of the 2004 Olympics, when he played little following his rookie season on the team that won the bronze medal, James could have let the experience sour him on international play.

Instead, he quickly committed to join the team again when Jerry Colangelo began assembling the program in late 2005 and then became one of the loudest American voices telling everyone that kind of flop won't happen again this time.

James averaged 13.9 points two years ago in the world championships, but the team's most talented player was too content to be a third option. He never led the Americans in scoring in any of their nine games. Last summer he spent all offseason working to correct the few weaknesses in his game, an inconsistent jumper that the San Antonio Spurs forced him to take — and too often miss — during their sweep of the Cavaliers in the NBA finals.

"You don't always have to speak as a leader," Kidd said. "You can show by example, and I think he's doing both by putting the work, extra shooting, and then also, when it's needed, he speaks up."

Tigers' Rodriguez Is Headed to New York

Detroit gets reliever Farnsworth in trade with the Yankees

BASEBALL | The Detroit Tigers traded veteran catcher Ivan Rodriguez to the New York Yankees for hard-throwing reliever Kyle Farnsworth on Wednesday.

"Pudge" Rodriguez, a 14-time All-Star in the option year of a $50 million deal he signed with the Tigers in February 2004, will step into the hole in the Yankees' lineup created by Jorge Posada's shoulder injury. Posada had arthroscopic surgery on his right shoulder Wednesday and is out for the season.

"You have to give up to get," Yankees GM Brian Cashman said. "You have to do the balancing act."

Tigers president Dave Dombrowski said the team didn't want to trade Rodriguez but had bigger needs in the bullpen. The two teams began discussing the deal early Wednesday.

Rodriguez

The Yankees expect Rodriguez to join the team on Thursday, when they start a four-game series against the Los Angeles Angels.

"Pudge had a no-trade clause, and he waived it today to go to New York," Rodriguez's agent, Scott Boras, said. "Pudge has always wanted to play in New York, and Detroit felt it needed a relief pitcher, so both sides were able to get what they wanted to some degree." (AP)

Bulls Sign Deng to 6-Year Contract

NBA | Restricted free agent forward Luol Deng and the Bulls have agreed to a six-year contract that could be worth as much as $80 million.

The new deal was reported earlier by the Chicago Tribune, Chicago Sun-Times and ESPN.com, which said the contract would include $71 million in guaranteed money, but the Bulls did not release the terms of the contract. Deng averaged 17 points and 6.3 rebounds last season, while shooting 47.9 percent. That marked a drop from 2006-07, when he scored 18 points a game with 7.1 rebounds. (AP)

The Student Becomes the Inductee

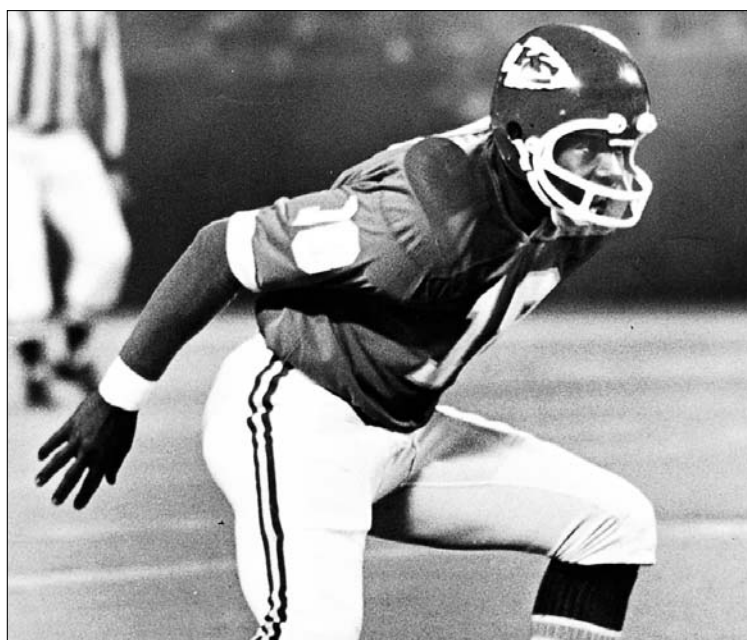

Thomas will finally make the football Hall 30 years after playing FOOTBALL | Long after he left school, Emmitt Thomas remained a student.

Quick and agile, the undrafted cornerback from tiny Bishop College became a five-time Pro Bowler. His 12 interceptions in 1974 were two shy of the NFL record. His 58 interceptions in a 13-year career are the fourth most among cornerbacks and stand as the record for the Kansas City Chiefs.

But teammates also admired a quietly studious approach to an inherently violent craft, the way he used his mind to complement his speed. Thomas would analyze every aspect of football. He wanted to know where everyone else was going to be and what they were going to do and when they were going to do it.

"He was a scholar of football," said Hall of Fame linebacker Bobby Bell, who teamed with Thomas to They're also not surprised that he's finally headed for the Pro Football Hall of Fame.

In 181 games, all with the Chiefs, Thomas led the NFL twice in interceptions. Shortly after retiring as a Coming late in life makes the honor even sweeter.

"It's overwhelming," the 65-year-old Thomas said. "My last playing days were 1978, so I figured it was all over. I didn't think anyone else from the Chiefs in my era would possibly make it. Yankees Avoid Sweep, Pound The Orioles 13-3

ORIOLES | Bobby Abreu hit a pair of homers while getting a day off from the field, Alex Rodriguez also went deep and the New York Yankees pounded the Baltimore Orioles 13-3 on Wednesday to avoid a three-game sweep.

Abreu also doubled and had three RBI as the designated hitter, and A-Rod and Xavier Nady each had two hits for the Yankees. New York had been outscored 20-10 the first two games of the series but still hasn't been swept by the Orioles in a three-game set at Yankee Stadium since 1986.

Mixing an improving slider with an overpowering fastball, Joba Chamberlain retired 11 of the final 12 batters he faced to win consecutive starts for the first time in his young career. He gave up two runs — only one was earned — and five hits in six innings, striking out six. Chamberlain (4-3) has allowed only two earned runs over his last three starts covering 19 innings. (AP)

"If you can't qualify for a major, I don't see any reason why you should play with the men."

— Annika Sorenstam on Michelle Wie's playing a PGA event this week.

Annika Faces Rough Road

Sorenstam has plenty of competition in her last major tournament

WOMEN'S GOLF | With her powerful sense of competitive pride, Annika Sorenstam knows that none of her rivals will step aside at the Women's British Open just so she can win her final major.

The Swede who dominated women's golf for a decade is out to win her 11th major before she bows out at the end of the season.

"I would love to win here," Sorenstam said. "It's the only major that I haven't won two or three times. If I could win this week, then I would say I've pretty much achieved everything that I possibly can."

The strongest field ever assembled for the British championship will be trying to keep her from that goal, however.

Defending champion Lorena Ochoa is looking for her second major of the year, and rivals such as Karrie Webb, Juli Inkster, Se Ri Pak and Laura Davies are also in the field with several newcomers from the United States and South Korea.

Paula Creamer has won three titles this season, and before Helen Alfredsson won the Evian Masters on Sunday, South Korean players had won five of the previous events on the LPGA Tour.

Annika Sorenstam said she was retiring after this season, meaning this weekend's British Open is her last major championship. She hopes to win her 11th major.

Leta Lindley, the only other American to win a tournament on the LPGA Tour this season, is also in a field that also includes the only American to have won three British Open titles, Sherri Steinhauer.

Although she admits that she now lacks the motivation to carry on playing and practicing week after week, Sorenstam said she has not lost her competitive edge.

"My expectations are always high. I believe in myself, and I know I can play this golf course," Sorenstam said. "But the competition is tough, and you just don't know. But I'm going to try and stay as competitive as possible."

PRESIDENTIAL POSTURING: Graphic biographies of presidential candidates John McCain and Barack Obama debut Oct. 8.

Call It Comical

Prior to Election Day, Obama and McCain square off in comics

GRAPHIC | It's a year of superheroes in Hollywood, with the big-budget epics of Batman, Iron Man and the Hulk, but a big-budget production out of Washington, D.C., is carving a niche in the animation trend.

Presumptive nominees John

McCain and Barack Obama will star this fall in their own comic books, put out by IDW Publishing, a San Diego-based publisher better known for telling the stories of robots ("The Transformers") and vampires ("30 Days of Night").

Don't expect Captain America-versus-Superman hijinks or supervillains threatening the electoral process. Trading sound bites for word balloons, the books purport to tell McCain and Obama's life stories, independently researched and illustrated by a veteran team of writers and artists.

"We're not doing anything that is sensational here," said IDW special projects editor Scott Dunbier, adding neither campaign was involved in the development of the books. "We're sticking to the facts."

On Oct. 8, the books will be released in comic book shops, will go on sale online and will go on sale for reading on cell phones.

The McCain book, with art by Stephen Thompson, is being written by Andy Helfer, a veteran comic-book author who helped develop the books that became the movies "Road to Perdition" and "A History of Violence."

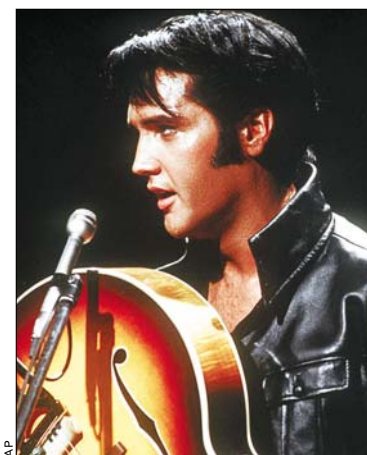

Obama's biography is being written by novelist Jeff Mariotte, who has also done comics on Superman, Spider-Man and "Star Trek." Tom Morgan is doing the art.

J. Scott Campbell did both covers; each features its candidate in a superhero pose of squared shoulders and fists on hips with an American flag in the background.

Campbell said it was inevitable that the covers are already generating controversy on the Internet as supporters of the two candidates look for signs of bias. For example, some posters say that the reddish tinge to the sky behind a smiling McCain looks ominous while Obama followers are unhappy their candidate's expression is stern.

Campbell said he based his depiction of McCain and Obama on photographs of them he found on the Internet and that in those, typically, McCain is smiling while Obama is not. As for the red sky, he said that's the standard color associated with Republicans while Obama's cover is Democrat blue.

"I was really trying to go out of my way to be extra-sensitive to the fact that I didn't want anything like that [bias] to come across," he said. "That wasn't the purpose of the book." DAVID TWIDDY (AP)

LOVE HIM TENDER: The Elvis karaoke craze has expanded with MySpace.

Karaoke Meets The King

Mix Elvis fans with MySpace users for an unusual contest

BELT IT OUT | Karaoke and Elvis: a match made in Graceland and MySpace. This year, the folks at Elvis Presley's former home have joined with the social networking Web site MySpace for a nationwide Elvis Week Karaoke Contest.

"We encourage folks to show us their style of an Elvis classic," said Kevin Kern, spokesman for Elvis Presley Enterprises, the company that runs tourist attractions at Graceland.

Presley died at Graceland on Aug. 16, 1977, and each summer the famous house becomes ground zero for a weeklong celebration drawing thousands of fans from around the world. The karaoke contest will get things going this year.

Participants can go to MySpace's karaoke site at Ksolo.myspace.com and record one of three Elvis songs: "Hound Dog," "If I Can Dream" or "Suspicious Minds."

The winner will perform at Graceland on Aug. 12.

Contestants could number in the thousands. Recordings can be submitted until Aug. 4. "It's going to be a tedious process," Kern said.

So You Think You Can Vote?

Judge urges viewers to dance their way to the presidential polls

MOTIVATION | If anyone could bridge the gap between the golden age of television comedy and today's reality shows, it's Norman Lear. But who would have thought that he could get young Americans dancing to the polls?

That's exactly what happened last week when producer Nigel

Lythgoe, a judge on Fox's "So You Think You Can Dance," urged viewers to visit Lear's DeclareYourself.com Web site, where they could register to vote in time for November's presidential election.

Impressed by Lear's nonpartisan effort, Lythgoe and Mike Darnell, head of Fox's reality show division, decided to mention the Web site on the show last Wednesday.

Lear was traveling when the show aired. But it didn't take him long to find out about it.

Judge Nigel Lythgoe urges viewers to register on Declareyourself.com.

After returning Thursday to his house in Malibu, Calif., the legendary producer and his wife, Lyn, ran into Darnell. He told Lear about the program (and that Lythgoe even wore the group's T-shirt sporting the message "VOTE") and suggested that Lear take a look.

When they returned home, their teen daughters had already found the show on TiVo. Because of the show, Lear said, Declare Yourself has been flooded with new visitors.

Michael Chabon says genres such as fantasy and horror deserve more props.

One Author's New Quest

Michael Chabon sets out to defend the honor of genre

LITERARY | Michael Chabon, the author of the exuberant, Pulitzer Prize-winning novel "The Amazing Adventures of Kavalier & Clay" and the new collection "Maps and Legends," has long harbored a passion: to make the literary world safe for genre fiction, and to expand the notion of what a serious work of fiction can be. We spoke to Chabon, 45, about his crusade to save comics, science fiction, fantasy, horror and detective fiction from condescension.

Where did this bias against work created for a popular audience come from?

In all fairness, it came from the fact that the vast preponderance of art created for a mass audience is crap. It's impossible to ignore that. But the vast preponderance of work written as literary art is high-toned crap. The proportion may settle down in the neighborhood of 90/10 — Stur-geon's Law said that 90 percent of everything is crud.

The conventional argument is the literary writer's work is well written, and the genre author can't write.

Every so often, a writer hacks and crawls out of the brambles of genre. Somebody like Philip K. Dick clearly began in the pulps, writing mass commercial fiction. Almost by dint of the passion of his fans, and the intensity of his vision, and all of that stuff, eventually, he ends up getting canonized in Library of America. But those are much more the exceptions.

In some ways, the traditional high-brow argument can seem rather silly: "If we don't privilege and protect certain kinds of work, it'll all be 'American Idol' all the time" — that the forces of commercial culture will swamp all the good stuff.

Unquestionably — it's not just futile; it's ultimately destructive to try to fence things in that way. Robert Frost said, "Something there is that does not love a wall."

SCOTT TIMBERG (LOS ANGELES TIMES)

'ENTOURAGE,' EAST COAST: Mark Wahlberg and Stephen Levinson (who produce "Entourage" and "In Treatment") have gotten the OK from HBO for a new series, "How to Make It in America." The comedy is about 20-somethings chasing their dreams in N.Y.C.

The Language of X Games

A sports subculture has a jargon that's all its own on ESPN

WHAT? | The X Games (9 p.m., ESPN) turns 14 this summer. ESPN, ESPN2 and ABC will air 14 hours of live X Games programming between tonight and Aug. 3, showcasing skateboard and BMX competitions. All broadcasts are available in high definition.

The X Game phenomenon interests me not so much as a sport, but as a subculture with a terminology and language all its own. As you can imagine, I am besieged by publicity materials from all manner of programming, from reality to sports, fashion, drama, comedy and movies. But I find the X Games press releases uniquely incomprehensible.

X-TREME! Watch cool dudes do fancy tricks on ESPN, ESPN2 and ABC.

Here's a sentence from ESPN: "This will mark the first time ever that X Games will not have a stand-alone vert ramp." Good to know.

Here's another: "SuperPark will be a 100 percent transition-focused design blending a variety of terrain and obstacles into one seamless course." Needless to say, I'm thrilled for SuperPark, whatever that is.

I know my inability to distinguish the lingo of BMX SuperPark from BMX Street marks me as a confirmed fuddy-duddy, careening helplessly toward Andy Rooney-style cantankerousness. It's simply best not to even try to keep up with the arcane argot of sports and youth micro-niche subcultures. It's better to stand back and marvel at their passion and enthusiasm. KEVIN MCDONOUGH (UNITED FEATURE SYNDICATE)

The Bose® QuietComfort® 2 Acoustic Noise Cancelling® Headphones.

Think of them as a peaceful getaway from the world around you. Whether it's the engine roar inside an airplane cabin, the bustle of the city or the distractions in the office, Bose QuietComfort 2 headphones help them fade softly into the background with the flick of a switch. You can savor delicate musical nuances without disturbing others. And when you're not listening to music, you can slip into a tranquil haven – where you can relax and enjoy peace and solitude. Clearly, these are no ordinary headphones. It's no exaggeration to say they're one of those things you have to experience to believe.

"It's as if someone behind your back reached out, found the volume control for the world, and turned it way, way, down," reports TechnologyReview.com. Bose QC®2 headphones incorporate patented technology that electronically identifies and dramatically reduces noise, while faithfully preserving the music, movie dialogue or tranquility you desire. We designed these headphones primarily for airplane travelers. But owners soon started telling us how much they enjoy using them in other places to reduce distractions around them. They're excellent for listening to music whether you're on the go, at home or in the office.

"Forget 'concertlike' comparisons; you'll think you're onstage with the band." That's what Travel + Leisure Golf said when these headphones were first introduced. You'll relish the sound of a bass guitar. Or a flute. Or the delicate inflections of a singing voice. The audio is so clear you may find yourself discovering new subtleties in even your favorite music.

Use them as a concert hall – or a sanctuary.

"The QuietComfort 2 lives up to its name, enveloping you in blissful sound in the utmost comfort. It's easy to forget they are on your head."

That's what respected columnist Rich Warren reports. To enjoy peace and tranquility, simply turn them on. To add Bose quality sound, attach the included audio cord and connect them to a laptop computer, portable CD/DVD/MP3 player, in-flight audio system or home stereo. They also offer a fold-flat design for easy storage in the slim carrying case.

Try the QC2 headphones for yourself, risk free. You really must experience them to believe it. Call toll free to try these headphones for 30 days. Use them on your next trip, in your home or at the office – satisfaction guaranteed. If you aren't delighted, simply return them for a full refund.

Technology

Electronics with LEDs keep homes glowing around the clock

Twinkle, twinkle, little Internet router. And cell phone. And digital video recorder. And cable modem. And game console. And power strip. And TV — even though it's turned off.

Turn off the lamps in a living room or bedroom today, and chances are good the room will still be aglow with the tiny diode lights of a half-dozen gadgets.

“Whoever sees that glow through my window must think I’m keeping aliens in my spare room.”

TOM HESPOS, IRKED BY LEDs

They can be useful indicators of what state a gadget is in, or where it is, but they also bug people who'd rather not have lights shining in their faces when they're trying to sleep or watch movies.

To sleep in a dorm room full of electronics at Cornell University, Rafael Garcia has covered some lights with black tape. He turns his laptop upside-down and places a mouse pad and a picture of his girlfriend on his desktop computer to block its lights. His electric toothbrush has to come out of its charger, or it will blink through the night.

Unplugging the gadgets stops them from disturbing the darkness, but an unplugged laptop or toothbrush also doesn't charge. Other devices, such as computers, take time to shut down and start up.

“It's gotten way, way, worse, especially in the last year or two,” said Shawn Therrien, a Los Angeles computer programmer. “Every single thing we buy has little neon-blue flashing lights on it. ... Turn the light off and they shine like beacons.”

Therrien's bedside nemesis is an alarm clock that doubles as an iPod docking station.

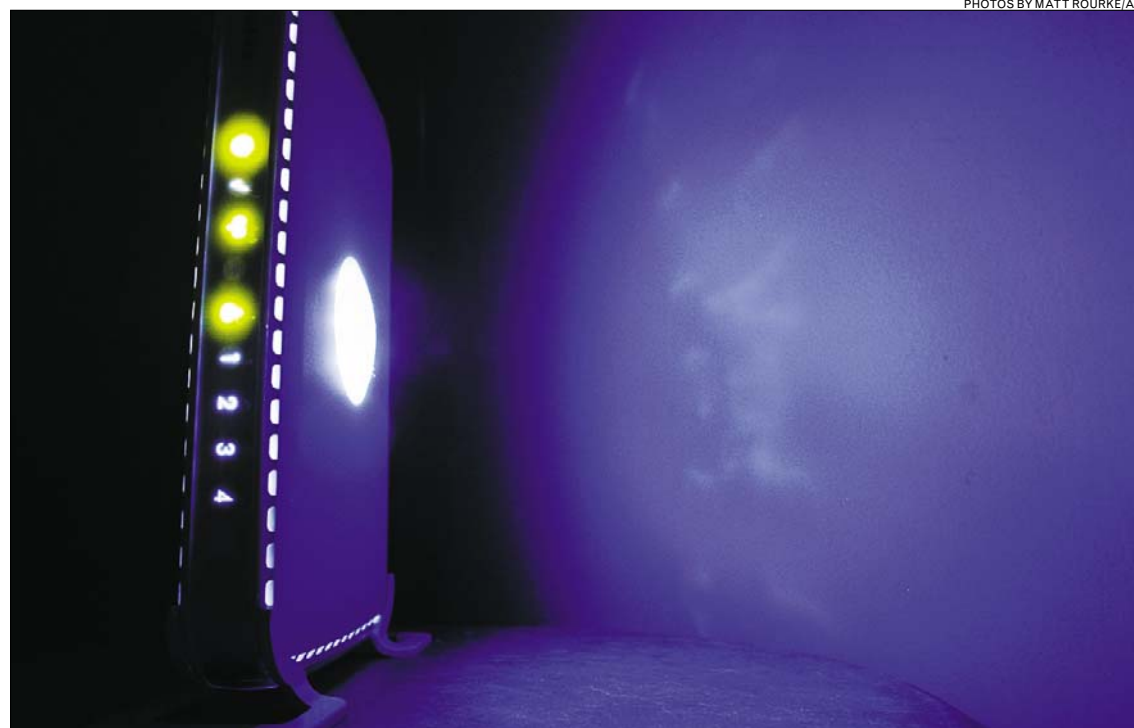

“It lights up like the Fortress of Solitude,” he said, likening it to Superman's headquarters of glowing crystals. He tamed it with 12 strips of black tape.

Tom Hespos, a partner in an advertising firm in New York, counted six glowing devices in his bedroom. One is an alarm clock with a blue backlight so strong he has to put a pillow between it and him.

And don't get him started on his Internet router, which has blinking blue light-emitting diodes.

“Whoever sees that glow through my window must think I'm keeping aliens in my spare room,” he said.

Blue LEDs have become particularly popular for electronics, and UNBEARABLE LIGHTNESS: LED-illuminated devices, like the wireless router shown above, can make a bedroom overly bright.

Night Lights

Glowing lights are meant to help indicate whether a gadget is working properly.

that's part of the problem. In dim light, our eyes are more sensitive to colors at the blue end of the spectrum, so blue LEDs look brighter, said Mariana Figueiro of the Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute's Lighting Research Center in Troy, N.Y.

When blue LEDs became available in 1993 — following red, green and yellow — they first showed up only in high-end equipment.

Andy Logan, principal designer at Frog Design in San Francisco, tries to steer manufacturers toward more subtle light designs rather than having the diodes shine like flashlights.

But he doesn't recommend designing products so that people can turn off the lights without turning the entire gadget off. The lights often indicate when a device shouldn't be unplugged, such as when a hard drive is writing data.

Outside the bedroom or dorm room, more blue LEDs might actually be a good thing — researchers are exploring whether they can be used to keep people alert and awake.

Scientists have discovered that a light-sensitive layer of the eye, separate from the part that allows us to see, sends signals to the body that affect rhythms of wakefulness and sleep.

That layer is also more sensitive to blue light than to any other color, said George Brainard, director of the light research program at Thomas Jefferson University in Philadelphia.

He has funding from the NASA-affiliated National Space Biomedical Research Institute to study whether blue-light treatment can help keep astronauts more alert. Figueiro is helping the Navy figure out whether blue light can help submariners adjust to their watch schedules.

Outside the bedroom, more blue LEDs might actually be a good thing.

For now, researchers don't believe the low levels of blue light emitted by gadgets is enough to change our sleep patterns.

“Some people are very, very sensitive,” Brainard said, “so I'd hate to say never.” PETER SVENSSON (AP)

Discussions

Obama/Kaine '08

Washington Post national political reporter MICHAEL D. SHEAR was online Wednesday to discuss the possibility of Tim Kaine as Barack Obama's running mate, and Obama's “Southern strategy.”

Is there a feeling in Washington that Kaine and Obama would be two relatively inexperienced candidates?

Yes. In fact, I already had a discussion with a key Republican yesterday who suggested that an Obama-Kaine ticket would be “the most inexperienced in the history of the world.” A bit of hyperbole there, but that is definitely one of the lines of attack that Kaine would engender.

Virginia Gov. Tim Kaine is rumored to be in the running for Obama's VP spot.

As a lifelong observer and student of American politics, I am surprised that the Democrats have developed a “Southern strategy.” The Republican party loyalty in the South, especially the Deep South, is near absolute. What is your opinion of the Obama campaign's expenditure of money in states such as Missouri, North Carolina and Georgia?

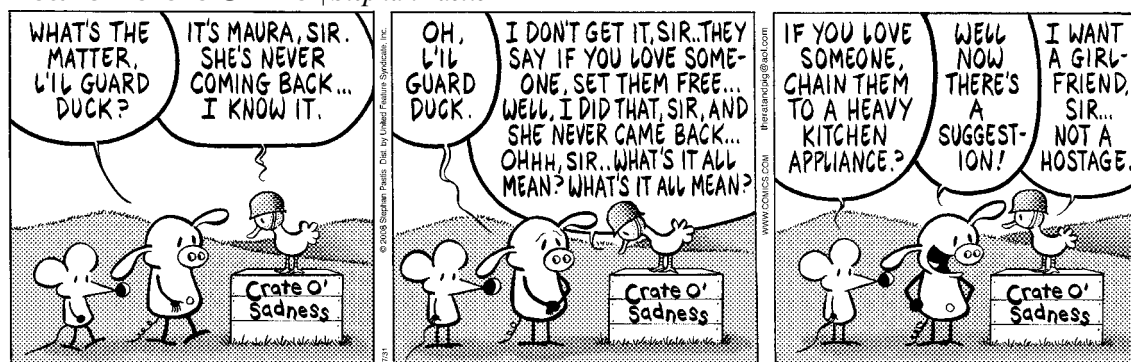

This will either turn out to be a brilliant strategy on the part of Obama or a total waste of time. The Republicans have had much success in presidential politics in the South, and most people think it's not a good way for Obama to spend money to go after places like Georgia. Having said that, the South is changing in places, too. Take Virginia, where Democrats are on an upswing in state politics, and the growth of Northern Virginia is shifting the demographic profile of the state. Obama has a decent chance of winning Virginia despite its history. And with the imbalance in money that he is expected to have, taking the chance is probably worth it.

Black Hills Are Not for Sale

CONTRARY TO THE author's assertion in "Rushmore and More" (July 30), the Black Hills were never ceded by treaty by the Lakota Tribe. The Sioux Nation has long refused a monetary settlement awarded by the Supreme Court in 1980 for the invasion of the Sioux Nation and resulting genocide after gold was discovered in the Black Hills. Hence the common knowledge of the slogan, "The Black Hills are not for sale," among Native Americans, even in the Native American legal community here in Washington, D.C.

 NAME: Annie Chabel
GIG: Video Americain clerk, programmer, of in-store film nights

VIDEO AMERICAIN IS a throwback to the golden age of the corner video store. As you'd expect of a Takoma Park institution, however, its local acts are backed up by global thinking. There are racks of international movies organized by director, genre and country of origin. The shop stocks DVDs, but also tapes. And the clerks are passionate about films that don't have Wookiees in them. If you want to check out Pieter Kuijpers' "Off Screen," the toast of the 2005 Montreal World Film Festival, the red envelope can't help you, but Video Americain can. And every week or two, there are free Thursday screenings that have ranged from "Rushmore" to "The Beaver Trilogy" to "Kitten With a Whip." This week, it's Fritz Lang's dystopian 1927 classic "Metropolis."

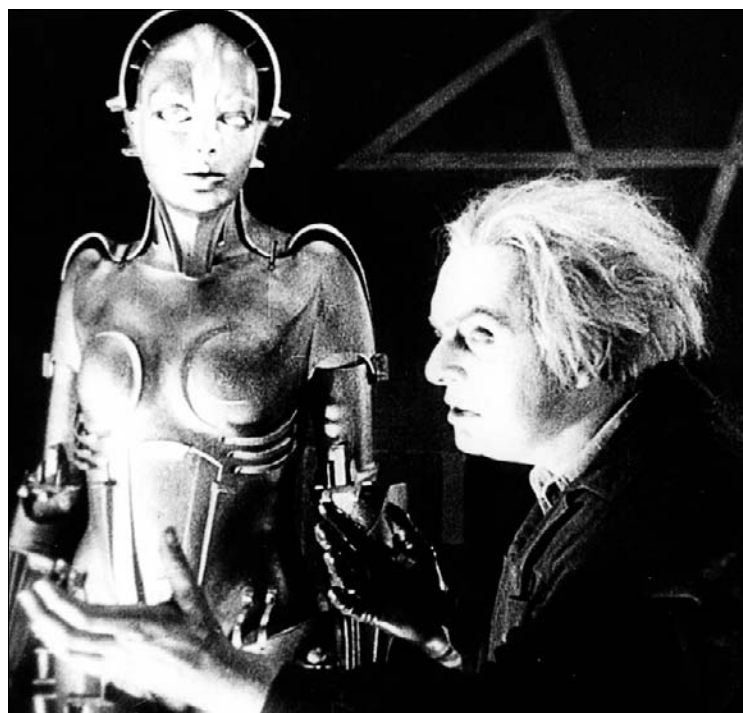

Why "Metropolis" now?

"Blade Runner" was showing at AFI and, I think, also the Uptown earlier in the year. There's been a resurgence of interest in the post-apocalyptic vision of a metropolitan future ... so I wanted to tap into the original movie that really captured that.

And what's coming up?

We're also showing this summer ... "Alien," "Code Unknown" and "Wayne's World." I tried to pick a good amount of ... movies that people would know a little bit better and then still balance it out with a lot of stuff that's been popular right now. I chose "Code Unknown" just because there's been a lot of emphasis on Michael Haneke's movies in the past year with his [English-language] remake of "Funny Games."

It's a tough time for video stores.

A PROBLEM LIKE MARIA: Robots rule in Fritz Lang's dystopian film "Metropolis."

What lies ahead?

A big problem that I think we're gonna face is that people don't have VHS players anymore, and with the DVD market being the way that it is, a lot of our more rare items have stayed VHS. People just aren't as interested in finding that stuff anymore, because they don't have their players.

Is there still room for personal service in the age of Netflix?

At almost every single shift, I have someone come up with something from our House Favorites shelf and talk to me about it. As long as people still want to have dialogue about

"As long as people still want to have dialogue about movies, we'll be able to hang on."

movies, we'll be able to hang on.

This summer's lineup contains fewer obscure titles than in the past. Why is that?

I'm sort of surprised that we didn't get more audience at our cult screenings, but I think that people are constantly bombarded with new movies coming out all the time, and so it's really easy for things that they don't know a whole lot about to go under the radar. GLENN DIXON

Where Imagination Roars

'The Lion King' goes from a kids' fantasy to a magical immersion

STAGE | As any parent who's ever been dragged kicking and screaming to see anything Disney translated to stage can attest, no one does spectacle like the Mouse House.

Unfortunately for audience members who aren't anticipating the next big dance number between all that pesky dialogue, story lines can be lost amid the big, bright sets and complicated props.

Luckily, chaperones don't have to live in fear of Disney's most popular film-to-stage rendition, "The Lion King."

Now entering its second sold-out decade in New York, the musical has finally made its way to D.C. and is taking up residency at the Kennedy Center. And while the characters are a bit one-dimensional and the plot isn't something that will make you go "Hmmm," director Julie Taymor has created an enchanted land into which even those who graduated from picture books long ago can escape.

In order to reimagine the cartoon tale for theater patrons, Taymor looked to the use of large-scale puppetry and the incorporation of African culture in this Africa-set family drama. It is during the musical interludes that the musical is most captivating. This is evident from the opening number ("Circle of Life"), when actors dressed as giraffes trot onto the stage, and leopards and zebras creep across it while birds soar all around.

And in this magical moment, even reluctant parents realize "The Lion King" is one Disney extravaganza worth seeing.

EVERYTHING OLD IS HOT AGAIN: Estelle, who recently left London for New York, is at the forefront of a generation of young English singers inspired to update '60s soul.

West London's Estelle channels a soulful American groove

MUSIC | It would be all too easy to lump Estelle (no last name, please) into the current crop of British retro-soul divas. True, her songs update '60s sounds with postmillennial beats and sharp production, and her full, confident vocals recall those of Amy Winehouse and Adele, but Estelle is no follower. Rather, she's a one-woman media conglomerate, occasionally controversial but always entertaining.

Fiercely independent, Estelle Swaray has proved especially business savvy, marketing herself through mixtapes while working at London's famous hip-hop record store Deal Real. She created her own imprint, Stellar Ents, and released her first album, "The 18th Day," in 2004 — two years before Winehouse's debut.

She met one of her biggest boosters, John Legend, after sending him an unsolicited demo, which he liked enough to sign her to his new imprint, Homeschool Records. Overseeing every aspect of her career has been survival instinct. "In today's world," she says, "you have to be able to do more than one thing."

Shining Star

“When you speak your mind and have an opinion, at least people care and talk about it. So let them talk. I can never be anything but me.”

To that end, Estelle has sharpened her MC skills along with her powerhouse vocals, making her an uncommon double threat. Her voice sounds smooth and effortlessly soulful whether she is singing an upbeat song like "No Substitute Love" or a ballad like "Back in Love," but on tracks like "Just a Touch," her flow is gritty and agile. Shine emphasizes that contrast, bringing to mind both Mary J. Blige and Lauryn Hill, two of Estelle's idols.

Still, the endless comparisons to her British contemporaries don't bother the singer too much, despite the mini-controversy she ignited earlier this year when she claimed the U.K. press ignores black female singers in favor of white artists. Today, she says the issue was blown completely out of proportion, but the brush with controversy stung.

"You get used to it," she says. "When you speak your mind and have an opinion, at least people care and talk about it. So let them talk. I can never be anything but me."

Several months later, the hubbub has been overshadowed by the release of "Shine," which lives up to its title, thanks to her strong songwriting and to an enviable roster of collaborators, including Cee-Lo, Kardinal Offishall, Wyclef

Jean, Swizz Beatz and Legend himself, who executive-produced. It's a transatlantic endeavor, combining her West London sensibility with American rhythms, and reflecting her recent move to New York City.

Her stomping single, "American Boy," which was produced by Will.i.am and features Kanye West, was a No. 1 hit in England earlier this year but barely broke the U.S. charts. However, "It was never about breaking in America," Estelle says. "It's about going global."

Her ambitions are being rewarded. "Shine" was recently nominated for the prestigious Mercury Prize, alongside Adele, British Sea Power and Radiohead. When the award is announced in September, Estelle says, she doesn't expect to win, but savors the validation: "Regardless, I put out a great album."

Take the Plunge

The coming-of-age drama 'Water Lilies' dives into adolescence

FILM | Teenage sexual angst, tormenting love triangles, body insecurity, hastily arranged and inadequately secret trysts, dangerous behavior, tender feelings, synchronized swimming.

Anyone who's sat in a movie-theater seat has seen all — well most — of these adolescent dramatics play out on the big screen, but French first-time director Céline Sciamma manages to make the coming-of-age movie feel entirely fresh.

With "Water Lilies," Sciamma introduces the fraught little tinderbox of brazen, questioning beauty Floriane (Adele Haenel), reticent tomboy Marie (Pauline Acquart) and resentful, lovelorn Anne (Louise Blachère).

During the course of a drab suburban summer — no ravishing Parisian buildings distract from these eye-catching sites — Marie finds herself pulled into the orbit of Floriane, the loveliest and most talked-about member of a synchronized swim team. Marie's new role as Floriane's lookout and confidant distresses Anne, who has her eye, hopelessly, on the French equivalent of the football team captain, who has his eye on Floriane, who has her eye on ... Marie, Sciamma's camera is as fluid as the shimmering pool the girls plunge into and out of, but her script is fat-free. Unlike our own prattling, hyper-culture-conscious movie teens, these girls are guarded and terse. This adds to the film's sense of tension; running out of time, too desperate to get on with it — whatever it is — to waste words.

There are boys as well in this world and Sciamma treats their own struggles with equal respect, but not equal time. Theirs is the tale for another day — and Sciamma will have hers; "Water Lilies" was well received at Cannes in 2007, where it debuted in the Un Certain Regard category. For now, it's tough enough just sorting out the feelings of a couple of suburban teens who know what they want but not how to get it. ARION BERGER (EXPRESS)

Profane Inspirations

'Jerry Springer: The Opera' mines misery and impiety for laughs

STAGE | The Studio Theatre says "high art meets low culture" in its version of "Jerry Springer: The Opera," but that's not really true. This enjoyable musical comedy is, rather, more a case of high camp meeting hot pop; and while the comedy is simply fair, the music is surprisingly good.

"Springer" feints at making serious points about our hunger for minutes of dubious fame and the unsettled consciences of men like the notorious host, but the opera, by Richard Thomas and Stewart Lee, is mostly content to be light, fun, absurd and extravagantly blasphemous.

"Springer" gets rolling with the host of the trashy talk show making a messianic entrance to his worshipful studio audience. This Springer looks a bit more like Andy Warhol, but Lawrence Redmond does a fine job of capturing Jerry's mannerisms. He teases humor in Springer's deadpan, incredulous and unflappable interactions with his ever-unfortunate guests — who in this case include a philanderer, his transgendered lover, an obese man with a fetish, Jesus, Mary, God and so on.

Many of the opera's shock value "jokes" about Springer's freaky guests are exceedingly stale, but the cast brings life to the material, particularly Bobby Smith (as Satan and Springer's warm-up man) and Ron Curameng (as a fetishist and Jesus).

Redmond is the only member of the 34-person cast who does not sing his lines, and the rest of the cast revolves around him busily, belting out tunes about stripping. Rarely have the most taboo topics in America been synthesized into pop-rock gems this beguiling. The opera's inconspicuous eight-person band combines with the multitude of voices onstage to create cascades of rich melodies — and smoothly shifts from ostentatiously operatic vocal workouts to, say, light funk.

By the time the tap-dancing members of the Ku Klux Klan sashay their way into the picture, it is abundantly clear that "Jerry Springer: The Opera" is a pleasant farce with a large, well-spent budget. You will not think about the message behind "Jerry Springer" after leaving the theater, but will probably have one of its songs stuck in your head. TIM FOLLOS

Brilliant Feets of Art

Art Whino's new show raises sneakers to museum quality

GALLERY | From the first Air Jordans to a fresh pair of Vans, sneakers are more than practical street or sport footwear — they're art. With that concept in mind, Art Whino owner Shane Pomajambo teamed up with kicks company Tagur for "Inked Souls," an exhibit of customized sneakers opening on Saturday — and sticking around — at the eclectic gallery's waterfront space.

How did this show come about?

I own Art Whino, and I've always been interested in trying to bring this kind of art form from California and New York to the D.C. area. This area is not really known for having any scene for this kind of art, and my goal is to have amazing shows and have people think about us when they think about this type of art.

What type of art do you mean?

I call it lowbrow or pop-surrealism — stuff that's emerged in the last 10 years from skateboard culture in California, like the breakdancing that happened in the '80s in New York.

How were the artists chosen?

I looked for a person who really looks at the art as a new, evolving form. I wanted to choose artists who completely covered the whole realm ... who were pushing the envelope. We got graffiti artists and [artists in] the other extremes, like oil painting, gave them all a pair of sneakers, and told them there are no rules.

How long will the exhibit run?

Once you're in Art Whino, you're in.

Does the artist have a say in the matter?

Yes, of course they do. When we represent an artist, we keep their work on display all year long. It kind of creates a fan base for the artists. We want to do as much as possible to help the artists.

What is E-Verify?

E-Verify is a free Internet-based system that gives employers the ability to confirm the legal working status of a new hire in seconds. E-Verify is a partnership between the Department of Homeland Security (DHS) and the Social Security Administration (SSA). E-Verify works by allowing participating employers to electronically compare employee information taken from the Form I-9 (the paper-based employee eligibility verification form used for all new hires) against more than 425 million records in SSA's database and more than 60 million records in DHS immigration databases. More than 70,000 employers use E-Verify and 1,000 new employers are joining the program each week.

Who should attend?

Health poster art shows how medical updates went viral

EXHIBIT | With images ranging from microscopically enhanced microbes to come-hither syphilitics, “An Iconography of Contagion: 20th-Century Health Posters and the Visual Representation of Infectious Disease” may be the sickest show in town. Michael Sappol culled 20-odd graphics from the vast holdings of the National Library of Medicine to tell the story of the communiqués that brought medicine to the masses. Before moving to the National Academy of Sciences’ C Street NW building in the fall, the exhibition remains on view by appointment for a couple of weeks at the Keck Center.

The World War II-era VD posters demonize women. Why?

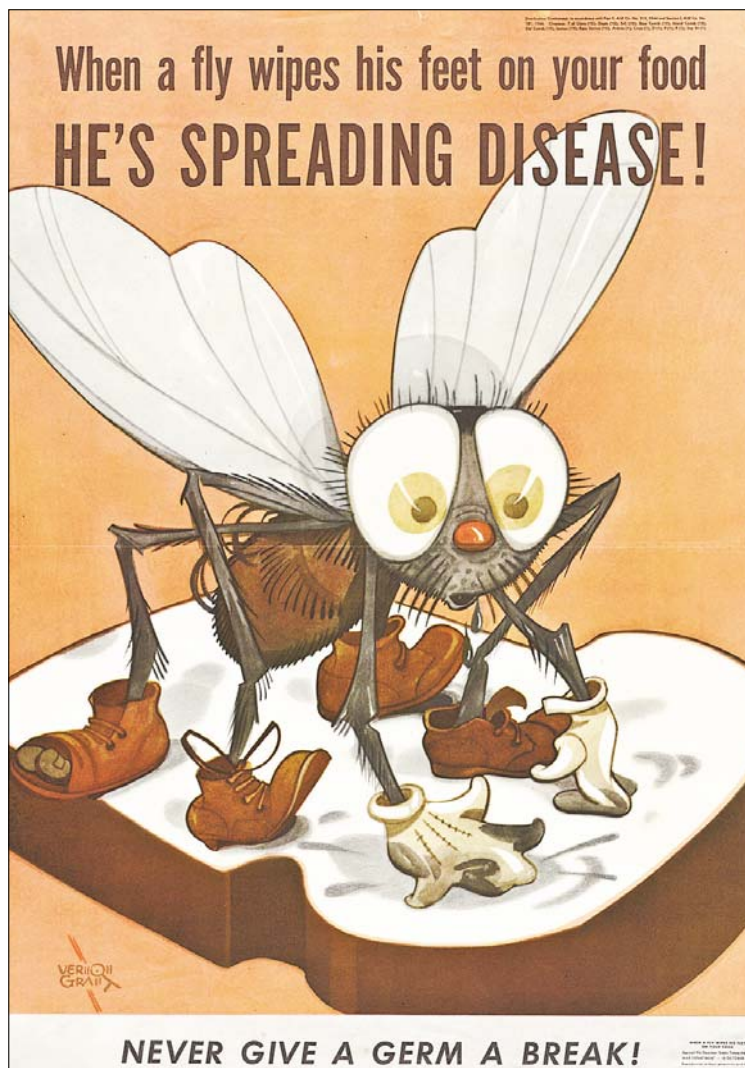

Part of that reflects a kind of larger social misogyny. VD is a difficult disease for people to deal with because it deals with sexuality in a society which doesn’t really like to have public discussion of sexuality.

What was the target audience in this case?

These posters in particular are aimed at men. They’re done by male artists, they are intended to mobilize men to take measures to deal with venereal disease, so they’re saying, “Men, watch out for women.” These posters are not put in places where women are likely to see them. They’re put into health clinics for men or military bases.

There’s a TB poster that foregrounds a happy nuclear family against teeming crowds above the message, “Discover the Unknown Spreaders!” Is the idea to encourage universal testing or xenophobia?

I think all of the above. There’s a lot of mixed messages in these posters. This is a [circa] 1940 poster, when the weight of American life had shifted. In the 1920s and ’30s, for the first time, there were more Americans living in cities than living in the countryside. ... There’s this sense that these are large, unhygienic cities of poor people who are prey to tuberculosis and likely to spread tuberculosis.

How did the rhetoric of posters change with the advent of AIDS?

Here, the people who are leading the campaigns are the people who are in the gay community who said, “Look, Ronald Reagan’s the president. He’s ignoring AIDS. This is a total emergency. Everyone we know is dying or getting sick, and we have to lead the campaign.” And they make the posters. They don’t go to advertising professionals to make the posters.

And yet official public health campaigns often mimic ad campaigns. Where do the similarities end?

An ad campaign ... works great for selling soap. One out of every 100 people buy the bar of soap — you got a very salable product. One out of every 100 people does something about AIDS — doesn’t do the trick.

Brian Posehn gets comic mileage from geekdom and metal

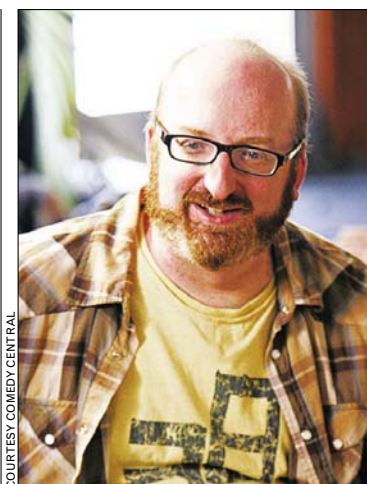

COMEDY | Brian Posehn built his act by being himself. He calls upon the two most prominent and contradictory things that make the comic tick: He’s a geek, and he’s a metalhead.

For this headbanger, life couldn’t be better. He has a new comedy CD out, “Nerd Rage,” is filming for “The Sarah Silverman Show” and is getting to hang with bands a younger Posehn grew up idolizing.

“I recently hung out with the guys in [Iron] Maiden, and it was completely surreal,” the comedian said. “I just kept thinking about the 15-year-old me and how he would lose his mind.”

Posehn brings his nerd rage to the Arlington Cinema ‘n’ Drafthouse this weekend. He’s also preparing to release a new stand-up disc and to try his hand at music.

“I’m getting ready to go into the studio with Scott Ian [of Anthrax]. We’re going to work on some stuff together,” said Posehn.

Where nerds and metal meet, there are comic books. Posehn teamed up with Gerry Dugan to write “The Last Christmas,” the story of Santa’s annual trip around the Earth after the apocalypse that leaves our planet ridden with zombies. Posehn’s new work was announced to comic book nation last week at the San Diego Comic-Con. The only details Posehn revealed to us: “It’s a new take on a superhero. I don’t think anyone has ever done this before.” ADAORA OTIJI (EXPRESS)

Flobots take hip-hop back to its roots as an activist art form

MUSIC | In the 1960s, folk music became the method by which a younger generation expressed political dissent, in part because it was a format accessible to everyone: Some of the most powerful songs of the era were done with major chords on one instrument, the guitar.

In this decade, there's another music form that's easy to do and increasingly used for the political opinions of a younger generation — and Flobots are helping shape hip-hop to be, as it was at its inception, a tool for engagement and activism.

"Rap is something that you can do with very little equipment," one of the groups two MCs, Jonny 5, said. "Anyone from any walk of life can put their feelings into a rap and other people accept it, just the expression."

For Flobots, that's political expression. The Denver outfit's new debut, "Fight With Tools," is a propaganda piece not unlike war propaganda from America's past; in the context of the album, however, the war is not a physical war, but, as laid out in opening track "There's a War Going on For Your Mind," a battle for freedom of thought.

"We tried to keep that feel of recruitment: We're recruiting you toward peace-building and community engagement," Jonny 5 said. "Sometimes it is deliberately done to polarize the peace-building issue the same way that, during wartime,

WE ARE THE FLOBOTS: The Denver ensemble uses beats to spread a message.

you polarize the war effort."

After forming in 2005 as a partnership between emcees Jonny 5

(real name: Jamie Laurie) and Brer Rabbit (real name: Stephen Brackett) — who had known each other since elementary school — Flobots quickly stepped aside from the hip-hop norm, not only with an uber-progressive message, but also with live orchestration, including heavy reliance on a viola for hooks. Not surprisingly, the versatility gained by a group effort resulted in an energetic live show that quickly built a fantastic reputation across the country.

"It's like having four DJs. With every instrument, you can turn the knob and slow up the track, loop it," Johnny 5 said. "You're not limited by whatever was already on the record."

The energy of Flobots' music is also fed by the group's seething anger at, as they see it, the ways in which authority figures have corrupted the system and suppressed dissent. Of course, that's not exactly a feeling exclusive to them — and the political winds of the day have certainly helped the group land where they are now.

"We are a product of the zeitgeist, and are surfing on it," Jonny 5 said. "This is a good time to be a Flobot." CHRIS MINCHER

Africa's Global Face

The Kennedy Center hosts a celebration with 'Africa Rising'

FESTIVALS | Launched in 2006 under the direction of media mogul Nduka Obaigbena — the editor in chief of Africa's leading daily newspaper, "Thisday" — "Africa Rising" is a festival aimed at shedding a more positive light on the continent.

With a fashion and music focus the festival is about "trying to promote African music, African talent, African musicians and African designers and trying to get them global attention," according to Obaigbena.

To reach this end, "Africa Rising" forgoes the usual panel discussions and focus groups for a night of pure entertainment — featuring headliners rap artist Jay-Z and soul crooner John Legend — with the hopes that a different approach may reach a more varied, larger audience.

"Certainly, it's not the best or only way," says Obaigbena of the festival's entertainment-oriented approach. "Music is just an additional element. ... We do lots of conferences too. But we also want to do events like [this] as we want to appeal to the younger generation, so that we can reach out to everyone through different mediums."

Alongside the musical showcase — which will also include performers from the continent like Youssou N'Dour, D'Banj and 2Face — there's a fashion element that will put global supermodels in the wares of designers from the continent.

But if you think the night is all about jamming and peeping Africa's latest trends, Obaigbena wants you to think again.

"Yes, we can deal with the symptoms, but let's focus on dealing with the problems," he says. "Africa needs investments. That's the focus of these events, to make investments in the infrastructure — both physical and social."

Pop Culture Mash-Up

The Force is strong with a Brit series that spoofs everything

DVD | Long, long ago, in a galaxy far, far away ... well, actually about 10 years ago in London, Channel 4 premiered a modest series called "Spaced." Its premise sounds like a bad sitcom, familiar to anyone who remembers "Ned & Stacey": Two strangers, comic book artist Tim (Simon Pegg) and writer Daisy (Jessica Stevenson), pretend to be a couple in order to rent a flat from the entertainingly soused landlady Marsha (Julia Deakin).

Hijinks ensue, but not in the "Three's Company" way the setup threatens. Written by Pegg and Stevenson, the show obsesses over pop culture and stealthily incorporates endless allusions to "The X-Files," "Star Wars" (obviously), "Buffy the Vampire Slayer," "Pulp Fiction," John Woo movies, "Trainspotting" and too many others to list.

Director Edgar Wright, who oversaw the entire series, integrates them into the series in unexpected ways, combining them with the urban misadventures of "Seinfeld," the fantasy sequences of "Northern Exposure," and the destructo-anarchic spirit of "The Young Ones."

The final scene of "The Empire Strikes Back" is not typically the one parodied, but it's beautifully reimagined in the penultimate episode, "Dissolution."

Perhaps because the show never makes its pop-culture references too broad or obvious, "Spaced" has become a miniature cult phenomenon, a fanboy fantasy that has launched the careers of all involved. Stevenson appeared in the most recent "Harry Potter" film, and Pegg, Wright and Nick Frost (who plays the gun-mad man-child Mike) have made two well-received comedies together, "Shaun of the Dead" and "Hot Fuzz."

"Spaced" launched the careers of its creators, including Nick Frost and Simon Pegg.

'Spaced' has become a miniature cult phenomenon.

Fans have been loudly requesting a third season of "Spaced" for years, and protesting a proposed American remake, which Fox has apparently scrapped. So, BBC America's new three-DVD set, which includes the entire series along with a galaxy of extras, will have to suffice.

In addition to deleted scenes and commentaries — some as hilarious as the show itself — the set includes the feature-length documentary "Skip to the End," which hints at the characters' happy fates.

Still, these 14 lively episodes are bittersweet in their brevity, as these well-drawn characters become the sort of friends you'd want to hang out with discussing graphic novels and horror flicks. STEPHEN M. DEUSNER

THE WASHINGTON POST'S FILM CRITICS TACKLE THIS WEEK'S BOX-OFFICE TOP 10

1 | The Dark Knight

Heath Ledger's performance is the most interesting thing in the film; when the Joker is absent, "The Dark Knight" loses most of its energy.

2 | Step Brothers

"Step Brothers" is so childish it seems to arrive in diapers, and that's good. Will Ferrell will literally do anything for a laugh, and John C. Reilly lets it go, too. STEPHEN HUNTER

3 | Mamma Mia!

Filmgoers eager to sample this musical's sunny, synth-pop pleasures are likely to feel bludgeoned by an Abba-bomb. ANN HORNADAY

Sure, she wrote, "Their Eyes Were Watching God," but she also inspired the moving documentary, "Zora Neal Hurston: A Heart With Room for Every Joy." Eating Around

COOKING LESSONS AT BEBO

All the Learning You Can Eat

Class starts early at Bebo Trattoria. Throughout the month of August, chef Roberto Donna will lead cooking classes for everyone: kids, early risers and dinner-daters. Make parent-child time more delicious by learning how to make kid-friendly pizza and pasta. Summer soups and crostini are morning lesson highlights, and each week-night and weekend Donna will lead a class through a five-course dinner featuring cuisines from a different region in Italy. THE MONOCLE

A Taste of the High Life

Even if you can't afford a pricey dinner at RAMMY favorite Monocle on Capitol Hill, you can get the Monocle experiences at the bar area. New on the bar menu are three-piece shrimp platters using different cooking methods and flavors. The "margarita" shrimp trio is dressed in citrus and jalapeños and served with a sour cream avocado sauce. (SG)

Cold Comforts

Sweet, soft and chilly, frozen yogurt blankets the District

TREATS | There are really only two ways to handle summer in the District: You can carefully watch your weight for that August weekend in Rehoboth or you can cool yourself off, stay away from a bikini, and enjoy 1,000 licks of ice cream. But in a shift of compromise, something very unlike Washington these days, there's a way to stay slim and stay cool: frozen low-fat treats.

On opposite sides of Dupont Circle, two new frozen yogurt shops opened up this steamy season. And while both serve frozen treats, they serve up very different vibes.

Mr. Yogato is as fun as it sounds. The space is small, the trash can is the shape of a rocket, and if you can guess a trivia question right while standing in line, your fro-yo is 10 percent off.

Standard flavors are "soft" and "tangy"; pair the latter with chunks of pineapple topping and it's almost like a virgin pina colada. Its soft-serve can be dressed in a variety of ways — sweet (Oreo), healthy (granola), fruity (kiwi) or Italian (olive oil and dried basil are free.)

In a cross between an Apple store and Be Bar, Tangysweet glows with white and iridescence and plays light club music. You almost wonder why a glass of champagne isn't on the menu. Its frozen yogurt tastes a bit more like yogurt than an ice-cream wannabe, and the house flavors are original, green tea and pomegranate. Frozen yogurt in drink form — smoothies — is also available and, with enough toppings, may serve as your fruit allotment for the day.

For those who can't sneak out to Dupont for a mid-afternoon snack, downtown workers can also share in a collective brain freeze. Dickey's Frozen Custard on I Street offers a full-fat version, but its low-fat rendition remains luscious. Basics rule: vanilla, chocolate or swirl with classic berry and chocolate toppings.

Dairy-free. Fat-free. Peanut- and tree-nut-free. Kosher. Those are tough criteria, but Sticky Fingers Bakery delivers.

Order the chocolate soft-serve; at first you'll know it's free from, well, a lot of things, but after a few cooling bites (as your mouth numbs), you'll forget that this is actually missing many of the usual ingredients.
